-----	--------------------

Innate characteristics of natural stone products are not considered defects. Rather they are naturally occurring variable intrusions of different elements. Commercially quarried stones are “uniform” to an extent, but rarely approach the degree of uniformity of porcelain or ceramic. Because stone is a continuously variable natural product, pieces fabricated from the same area within a given quarry should be accepted as being “the same”.

The following “imperfections” are not considered “defects”:

- Color variation
- Pitts & fissures
- Unattractive veins
- Color reaction, including visible efflorescence
